IN PROGRESS: Academic Manuscripts being developed : (The general idea behind these three basic manuscript "visions" is to handle semiotic epistemology, the hermeneutic circle, and the ideal type model of sociological theory & methodology in three volumes. But I work on them simultaneously. I mention them here only because there has been some "progress" but I am not laying claim to being able to complete these three in three years ! )

1 Pragmatic Sociology: An Invitation to Theory and Method in Social Science. (This would be a kind of introductory textbook suitable for undergraduates. The book could be used in courses on the Introductio to Sociology or the Introduction to Methods or The Introduction to Theory)

2. Tractatus Logico-Sociologicus: Theory and Methodology in Science and Social Science (This would be a graduate level textbook for advanced students who have already had introductions to theory and methods. It would perhaps also be relevant to academic colleagues in the social sciences and philosophy. The title, of course, is an echo of Spinoza's and Wittgenstein's books.)
3. Thinking Scientifically: The Structure of Scientific Theory and Methodology (This would be the same book but written for a more popular audience, including people who do not have a social scientific and/or philosophical-theoretical background. It would be geared to a mass market and written in everyday North American English. The market would be the citizen with a high school education.)
